Abstract

Welcome another Into the Odd hack that is tuned for world of Kerkenna, a stranded archipelago in the world of many other stranded archipelagos. With addition of Magic, Injuries and Quirks it became its own system that deserves its own little rulebook.

Life on archipelago of Kerkenna

Pellentesque cursus luctus mauris.

Getting Started

Pick some dice, a Referee and make them do a game for you.

Choose a knight, roll stats, pick gear and go for it.

Scope

From one-shots to long adventures, but probably not a full campaign.

Dice Rolls

To resolve some events a roll is needed. There are two mechanics that modify roll itself or dice in the roll.

Upface & Downface. Certain abilities can Upface and Downface a die. To Upface a die, find it in the sequence:

d1, d4, d6, d8, d12

And replace it with the next one. To Downface a die, replace it with previous one. d1 can't be Downfaced and d12 can't be Upfaced.

You probably don't have a d1 in your possession, but you can easily model it by using its property of always rolling the same face with 1 on it.

Highroll & Lowroll. There are several types of rolls: attack roll, virtue check, spellcasting roll and more. Many of them, including named three, can be Highrolled and Lowrolled.

To Highroll a roll, add a duplicate of a die that already exists in the roll. Perform a roll and then remove a die from it which shares amount of faces with the one added. Typically, you want to remove the lowest one, but ultimately its for you to decide which one to remove.

It is possible to double Highroll by adding two dice before the roll and then removing two that share amount of faces with those added. Naturally, this approach extends to any degree of Highrollness.

To Lowroll – do the same, but you must remove the highest dice for each degree of Lowrollness.

If there is a need to simultaneously Highroll and Lowroll remove High- and Low- pairs until only one type of "rollness" remains.

It is possible to Highroll and Lowroll after the actual roll is performed. To do that choose a die that is present in the roll and roll it in addition to those already there. Then proceed as if they were rolled together.

Creating a Knight

Virtues

Each knight has three attributes that describe his body, mind and soul.

Vigor. Strong limbs, firm hands, powerful lungs.

Clarity. Keen instinct, lucid mind, shrewd eyes.

Spirit. Charming tongue, iron will, fierce heart.

Knight's creation starts by rolling d6 + d12 four times; record not only the sum, but also individual values of each die. Each of those rolls determines one of the knight's Virtues, you choose which is which and discard the remaining one.

Then, determine knight's capacity for Injury, Focus and Stress according to steps below.

- Half, rounded up, of d6 you assigned to Vigor is the amount of Lethal Injuries the knight can survive before dying.
- Half, rounded up, of d12 you assigned to Vigor is the amount of Serious Injuries the knight can survive before dying.
- The value of d6 you assigned to Clarity is maximum Focus the knight has.
- Half, rounded up, of d12 you assigned to Spirit is maximum Stress the knight can endure before suffering a Trauma, minimum is 2.

Guard. Roll 2d4 to determine the maximum Guard the knight has.

Feats. Knight knows all three Feats: Smite, Focus and Deny. They can perform them during combat, details of which are described later.

Weapons & Gear

Weapons have properties to reflect their behavior.

- Hefty weapons require one hand. Only one Hefty item can be wielded at once.
- Long weapons require both hands and are Impaired in confined environments.
- Slow weapons cannot be used if the attacker has moved this turn.

Common Weapons.

Hefty, simple tools. d6 hefty: Pitchfork, Hatchet

Long, Slow Tools. d8 long, slow: staff, logging axe, pick

Hand Weapons. d6: dagger, club, handaxe

Hefty Weapons. d8 hefty: spear, mace, axe

Long Weapons. d10 long: poleaxe, billhook

Sling: d4 hefty

Javelin: d6 hefty

Uncommon Weapons.

Shortbow: d6 long, slow

Shortsword: 2d6

Longbow: d8 slow

Rare Weapons.

Longsword: 2d8 hefty

Greatsword: 2d10 long, slow

Curvebow: 2d6 long, slow

Crossbow: 2d8 slow

Armour. Generally, each layer of armour gives an additional armour point. Steel protection is rare, so helms, plates and chainmail are very valuable assets. You rather likely to find:

Coat: AI (mail, gambeson, flexible armour suitable for general wear or beneath plates)

Helm: AI (kettle, nasal, bucket, coif)

Shields. Takes one hand, gives one point in armour, common to find. Does not stack if there are two shield. It has d4 as a weapon die.

Spiked shields turn that die into d6.

Magic can be found on Kerkenna and, though not frequently, knights known to employ it during their endeavours. Some knights are Mages and some are Witches.

Basic Rules

Focus & Stress

There are two important resources each knight has: the amount of thought the knight can put into perfecting a task and the amount of effort the can put into a failed task to fix it. Those are tracked by Focus and Stress respectively.

Focus. When a roll is performed that can be effected by a character, they can spend Focus to enhance it. It must be declared before rolling the dice. For each point of Focus spent – Highroll that roll.

One can not only plot how to enhance the roll, but also how to sabotage a roll. If one character can affect the roll of another in a destructive way, for each Focus spent the roll is Lowrolled.

Usually, a knight has no restriction how much Focus they can spend to enhance an action, but determining how much focus is possible to spend to oppose a given action should be discussed with Referee.

The order is important, so opposing characters decide how much Focus they spend simultaneously.

Stress. Increasing one's Stress is done similarly, but must be done after the roll.

After a roll is made, a knight can decide that they are not satisfied with the result and try to fix it by acquiring Stress. For each gained Stress, Highroll that roll.

One can also acquire Stress to oppose an action after the roll is made.

Opposing characters decide how much Stress they spend simultaneously.

Character can't spend Stress if they are at maximum stress.

After resolving an action, check if your stress is at maximum. If it is, set it to zero and the character suffers a Trauma(see Injuries section for details).

Saves. To pass a Save, roll a d20 equal or below the relevant Virtue. Failure means negative consequences, not always a failed action.

Turns. A turn is enough time to Move and then perform an Action, always in that order.

Attacks

Take the Weapon Dice noted on your weapon(s), shield, and granted by bonuses. Go through the following steps in order:

1. Declare and spend Focus, target declares opposition and matching High- and Lowrolls are removed.
2. All combatants that attack the same target roll simultaneously, but do not mix the dice together as Focus and Stress is applied separately.
3. Remove extra dice added through Focus.
4. Declare Stress gain, remove matching High- and Lowrolls roll additional dice.
5. Remove extra dice from Stress.
6. Now you can mix all dice together and declare which one is used as a damage die and which are spent on Gambits.
7. If the target or their nearby allies can Deny they may use it.
8. If the damage die is discarded - assign a new one, but Gambits can't be changed.
9. Add any extra Damage from attackers who are Bolstering the Attack.
10. Subtract the target's total Armour score.
- II. The Attack causes that much Combat Damage.

Imaired attacks roll d4 only and cannot gain bonus dice or benefit from Feats.

Blast attacks target everybody in their area, rolling each separately.

Combat

Combat Damage.

The attack's Damage is split between the target's Guard and their Vigor at target's discretion, both are reduced by respective amount.

If there was no overspill into Vigor then they evade the Attack.

If it overspills into target's Vigor – they are Wounded.

Check if damage to Vigor causes a Scar or an Injury.

Virtue loss.

Victims are only Slain, Mortally Wounded or Injured if the Virtue was reduced by Combat Damage, never as a result of Virtue Loss.

At 0 Vigor you are Exhausted and cannot Attack if you have moved this turn.

At 0 Clarity you are Exposed and treated as having 0 Guard.

At 0 Spirit your attacks are Impaired rolling a single d4 only.

Death. Even the boldest Knight can die a sudden or ignoble death. Prepare yourself for this. When a Knight dies the player creates a new Knight and they are added to the Company as quickly as possible.

Feats

These special actions known by knights can be performed as described below. Using Feats risks the knight becoming Fatigued which prevents them from using further Feats until they rest.

Smite. Release your righteous fury

- Use before rolling a melee Attack.
- The Attack gains either +1d12 or Blast.
- Pass Vigor check or become Fatigued.

Focus. Create an opening to exploit

- Use after rolling an Attack.
- Perform a Gambit without using a die.
- Pass Clarity check or become Fatigued.

Deny. Rebuff an attack before it lands

- Use after an Attack roll against you or an ally within arm's reach.
- Discard one Attack die from the roll.
- Pass Spirit check or become Fatigued.

Gambits

Attackers can discard any number of dice in Attack Roll with value 4 or higher to perform Gambits, each one causing one of the effects below. The affected foe must be the same as the target of the attack, except for Patch a Wound Gambit.

For gambits other then Bolster, Move and Patch a Wound the target receives a Vigor Save to ignore the effect.

- Bolster the Attack for +1 total Damage
- Move after the Attack, even if you already moved or are unable to move
- Repel a foe away from you
- Stop a foe from moving next turn
- Impair a weapon on their next turn
- Trap a shield until your next turn
- Dismount a foe
- Patch a Wound of yourself or an ally at arms range
- Other effect of a similar level of impact

If a die of 8 or higher is used in melee then a Strong Gambit is performed and the attacker chooses one of the following:

- No Save is granted to the target
- Greater effect such as disarming an item, breaking a wooden shield or removing a helm. Bolster can't add more than 1 damage.

Patching a Wound Gambit allows one knight to tend to another one, or one knight to tend to themselves. Tending knight rolls a Clarity check and, if they pass, the one untended Injury becomes tended and its consequences disappear. If the save fails, the Injury is still tended, but the target knight make Vigor save. If this one also fails the injury increases in lethality, potentially killing a knight.

Lasting damage

Scars

Each time a knight sustains damage that reduced their Guard to zero with overspill into Vigor they gain a Scar. Roll damage die that did damage again and consult the table below.

Injuries

A body of a knight is tough and trained since childhood, but it can endure only so much. Dice that determine knight's Vigor also defines amount of Serious and Lethal Injuries they can sustain.

To track those injuries use Injury Slots that record nature of the Injury, damage die that caused it and a Consequence that comes with it.

There are several ways to get an Injury when a knight receives a hit.

- ♥ If a knight lost 6, 7, 8, or 9 Vigor through combat damage – take a Serious Injury.
- † If a knight lost 10 or more Vigor through combat damage – take a Lethal Injury.
- ♥ If you lost half or more of your remaining Vigor, but not all of it - take a Serious Injury or fall unconscious
- † If you lost all your Vigor or more through combat damage - take a Lethal Injury

If more than one condition applies, take the worst one. You should never take more than one Injury at a time. Check for each Attack separately.

Consequences of an Injury.

When knight suffers an Injury it fills corresponding injury slot, recording a die that caused an injury. If a knight is out of those slots, fill a one with next lethality. If they are out of those, the knight is Slain.

Each injury comes with consequences, after filling a slot roll d4 and consult the table below.

Roll d4	Consequence
1	The cut is deep, you are Bleeding: lose 1 Vigor when your turn starts
2	Pain is unbearable, you are in Agony: lose 1 Clarity when your turn starts
3	Grievous wound, you are in Distress: lose 1 Spirit when your turn starts
4	Luck is on your side, no effect

Trauma.

When Stress reaches the limit a knight can sustain – it resets and leaves a Trauma behind. Trauma counts as a Serious Injury and can potentially cause a heart attack and kill a knight if they are out of Injury slots.

Outside of combat

Recovery

Only a swift moment of safety is required to recover one's Guard.

Short Rest

Probably can restore 1 Virtue if the knight has 0.

However, to recover spent Focus and reduce acquired Stress at least an hour of rest is needed.

Focus. Yap yap, each short rest is less effective.

Stress. Each time, half.

Long Rest

Virtue restoration . Sustenance, Remedy, Stimulants.

Healing an Injury. Yap yap, doctor, guard, quirks

Coping with Trauma. Referee decides how long it would persist and how it should be treated. By default, on the first morning after having a Trauma it heals itself, but leaves a permanent mark. Acquire a Quirk as if a knight healed from an Injury.

Quirks

Bloodlust. A visceral reaction to blood fuels strength, but lessens control. You can upface one die of your weapon if you are wounded. However, if somebody is wounded, you can't engage them with nonlethal force

Desensitized. The things you saw made everything else bleak in compresent, you don't feel much ever since. When you treat an injury on the battlefield you roll with an additional Focus. However, you can't treat yourself.

Thickskinned. After you recovered, your skin changed. It became rougher and harder to pierce. You ignore first damage to your Vigor per combat if it is not larger than 1. However, when your injury is treated on the battlefield the roll is treated as if it is opposed with an additional Focus.

High pain tolerance. Your body seems determine to never let you suffer again. You can ignore up to one Agony consequence of your injury. However, each time you roll 20 on 'Vigor' check you lose 1 'Vigor'

Masocistic. Pain is unbearable, but somehow it's a good thing. You regain two Focus each time you receive a serious injury that is not from Trauma. You regain all Focus if you receive a Lethal Injury. However, you can't reduce stress during Short Rest.

Blade obsession. At the beginning of each day, randomly determine a weapon you own that you are obsessed with. You can upface any die of that weapon. However, each time you strike, you must strike with the weapon you are obsessed with. You can't part with it, during combat it must be in your hand, otherwise at arms length at most.

Gore facination. You ignore Distress conditions of your Injuries. However, you must treat your Injuries by yourself.

Stressjunkky. Each time you gain Stress, also gain Focus. However, your maximum Stress is halved, rounded down. It can't go lower than 1.

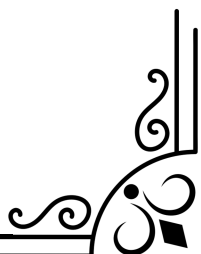

Bloodthirsty. Restore one Focus each time your hit reduces both Vigor and Guard with Attack you participate in. However, gain one Stress when an attack you participate in does not reduce Vigor. If this point of Stress would cause Trauma gain no Stress.

Something to fill the gaps

Spellcasting

Spellcasting resources is represented by a set of d6 dice equal to the value of Clarity. Each time you restore Spirit via indulging a Passion, you can regain up to two missing dice from this set.

To cast a spell, a caster rolls any number of dice as an Action from that set and then decides what to cast. Only one spell can be cast per roll. If the spell does not state otherwise, Smite feat is not applicable for attacks performed within them.

Here are spells that a knight can learn during mage training:

Quick summary of several spell with reference to a list of spells in the end.

Detect Magic

Pick any number of dice, for each one which rolled for a maximum value you can ask a question about surrounding magic and receive truthful answer, but the amount of words in that answer can't exceed the value rolled on the die. For each other die, the answer is either yes, no or silence if the question is not applicable. Information for the answer is provided by spells around you and yourself. For example, spells usually are not directly marked by their caster and are not aware of it's surroundings beyond the spells design.

Recuperation of Magic

When caster rolls dice to cast a spell, additionally to casting they can choose half, rounded down, of remaining dice and discard the rest. These chosen dice can be stored to cast spells later as if you rolled them. They persist until spent, but the total amount of dice(stored and unrolled) can't exceed the value of Clarity.

Witchcraft

Witches cast spell as a manifestation of favors granted them by their patrons. So, logically, there should be different patrons with different sets of spells and different ways to please them.
