Abstract

Welcome another Into the Odd hack that is tuned for world of Kerkenna, a stranded archipelago in the world of many other stranded archipelagos. With addition of Magic, Injuries and Quirks it became its own system that deserves its own little rulebook.

Getting Started

Pick some dice, a Referee and make them do a game for you.

Choose a knight, roll stats, pick gear and go for it.

Scope

From one-shots to long adventures, but probably not a full campaign.

Dice Rolls

To resolve some events a roll is needed. There are two mechanics that modify roll itself or dice in the roll.

Upface & Downface. Certain abilities can Upface and Downface a die. To Upface a die, find it in the sequence:

d1, d4, d6, d8, d12

And replace it with the next one. To Downface a die, replace it with previous one. d1 can't be Downfaced and d12 can't be Upfaced.

You probably don't have a d1 in your possession, but you can easily model it by using its property of always rolling the same face with 1 on it.

Highroll & Lowroll. There are several types of rolls: attack roll, virtue check, spellcasting roll and more. Many of them, including named three, can be Highrolled and Lowrolled.

To Highroll a roll, add a duplicate of a die that already exists in the roll. Perform a roll and then remove a die from it which shares amount of faces with the one added. Typically, you want to remove the lowest one, but ultimately its for you to decide which one to remove.

It is possible to double Highroll by adding two dice before the roll and then removing two that share amount of faces with those added. Naturally, this approach extends to any degree of Highrollness.

To Lowroll – do the same, but you must remove the highest dice for each degree of Lowrollness.

If there is a need to simultaneously Highroll and Lowroll remove High- and Low- pairs until only one type of "rollness" remains.

It is possible to Highroll and Lowroll after the actual roll is performed. To do that choose a die that is present in the roll and roll it in addition to those already there. Then proceed as if they were rolled together.

Creating a Knight

Virtues

Each knight has three attributes that describe his body, mind and soul.

Vigor. Strong limbs, firm hands, powerful lungs.

Clarity. Keen instinct, lucid mind, shrewd eyes.

Spirit. Charming tongue, iron will, fierce heart.

Knight's creation starts by rolling d6 + d12 four times; record not only the sum, but also individual values of each die. Each of those rolls determines one of the knight's Virtues, you choose which is which and discard the remaining one.

Then, determine knight's capacity for Injury, Focus and Stress according to steps below.

- Half, rounded up, of d6 you assigned to Vigor is the amount of Lethal Injuries the knight can survive before dying.
- Half, rounded up, of d12 you assigned to Vigor is the amount of Serious Injuries the knight can survive before dying.
- The value of d6 you assigned to Clarity is maximum Focus the knight has.
- Half, rounded up, of d12 you assigned to Spirit is maximum Stress the knight can endure before suffering a Trauma, minimum is 2.

Guard. Roll 2d4 to determine the maximum Guard the knight has.

Feats. Knight knows all three Feats: Smite, Focus and Deny. They can perform them during combat, details of which are described later.

Basic Rules

Focus & Stress

There are two important resources each knight has. The amount of thought they can put into perfecting a task and amount of effort they can put into a failed task to fix it. Those are tracked by Focus and Stress respectively.

Focus. When a roll is performed that can be effected by a character, they can spend Focus to enhance it. It must be declared before rolling the dice. For each point of Focus spent – Highroll that roll.

One can not only plot how to enhance the roll, but also how to sabotage a roll. If one character can affect the roll of another in a destructive way, for each Focus spent the roll is Lowrolled.

Usually, a knight has no restriction how much Focus they can spend to enhance an action, but determining how much focus is possible to spend to oppose a given action should be discussed with Referee.

The order is important, so opposing characters decide how much Focus they spend simultaneously without telling each other. They both tell Referee in private and the roll is resolved afterwards.

Stress. Increasing one's Stress is done similarly, but must be done after the roll.

After a roll is made, a knight can decide that they are not satisfied with the result and try to fix it by acquiring Stress. For each gained Stress, Highroll that roll.

One can also acquire Stress to oppose an action after the roll is made.

Opposing characters decide how much Stress they spend simultaneously without telling each other. They both tell Referee in private and the roll is resolved afterwards.

Character can't spend Stress if they are at maximum stress.

After resolving an action, check if your stress is at maximum. If it is, set it to zero and the character suffers a Trauma (see Injuries section for details).

Saves. Yap, yap, roll under.

Virtues. Limits, penalties for 0s, Wounded status.

Turns. Move then attack.

Exposed. Caught off guard

Death Make a new one, add to the company
Attacks

Attacks always hit, so gather all your weapon dice – those are your attack roll. At this moment the knight declares and spends Focus, target declares opposition and matching High- and Lowrolls are removed.

All combatants that attack the same target roll simultaneously, but do not mix the dice together as Focus and Stress is applied separately.

Remove extra dice added through Focus.

After that the Stress is acquired by attackers and their opponent, matching High- and Lowrolls are removed and extra dice are rolled.

Remove extra dice from Stress.

Now you can mix all dice together and declare which one is used as a damage die and which are spent on Gambits.

If opponent knows the Deny feat they use it after you decided.

You can choose some other die as a damage die, but you can't reassign Gambits.

Combat

Feats

These special actions known by knights can be performed as described below. Using Feats risks the knight becoming Fatigued which prevents them from using further Feats until they rest.

Smite. Release your righteous fury

- Use before rolling a melee Attack.
- The Attack gains either +1d12 or Blast.
- Pass Vigor check or become Fatigued.

Focus. Create an opening to exploit

- Use after rolling an Attack.
- Perform a Gambit without using a die.
- Pass Clarity check or become Fatigued.

Deny. Rebuff an attack before it lands

- Use after an Attack roll against you or an ally within arm's reach.
- Discard one Attack die from the roll.
- Pass Spirit check or become Fatigued.

Gambits

Attackers can discard any number of dice in Attack Roll with value 4 or higher to perform Gambits, each one causing one of the effects below. The affected foe must be the same as the target of the attack, except for Patch a Wound Gambit.

For gambits other than Bolster, Move and Patch a Wound the target receives a Vigor Save to ignore the effect.

- Bolster
- Move
- Repel
- Stop
- Impair
- Trap
- Dismount
- Patch a Wound
- Other effect

If a die of 8 or higher is used in melee then a Strong Gambit is performed and the attacker chooses one of the following:

- No Save is granted to the target
- Greater effect such as disarming an item, breaking a wooden shield or weapon, or removing a helm. This does not increase the Damage from Bolster.

Treating an Injury . Yap yap, Gambit. Yap, yap, after combat is over.

Scars

Each time a knight sustains damage that reduced their Guard to zero with overspill into Vigor they gain a Scar. To determine which particular one they get, roll damage die that did damage again and consult the table below.

Injuries

A body of a knight is tough and trained since childhood, but it can endure only so much. When creating a knight, your roll for Vigor determines amount of Serious and Lethal Injuries they can sustain.

To track those injuries use Injury Slots that record name of the Injury, damage die that caused it and a Consequence that comes with it.

There are several ways to get an Injury when a knight receives a hit.

- ♥ If a knight lost 6, 7, 8, or 9 Vigor through combat damage – take a Serious Injury.
- † If a knight lost 10 or more Vigor through combat damage – take a Lethal Injury.
- ♥ If you lost half or more of your remaining Vigor, but not all of it - take a Serious Injury or fall unconscious
- † If you lost all your Vigor or more through combat damage - take a Lethal Injury

It might be the case that more than one condition applies, take the worst one. You should never take more than one Injury at a time. Check for each Attack separately.

Consequences of an Injury.

When knight suffers an Injury it fills corresponding injury slot, recording a die that caused an injury. If a knight is out of those slots, fill a one with next lethality. If they are out of those, the knight is Slain.

Each injury comes with consequences, after filling a slot roll d4 and consult the table below.

Roll d4	Consequence
1	The cut is deep, you are Bleeding: lose 1 Vigor when your turn starts
2	Pain is unbearable, you are in Agony: lose 1 Clarity when your turn starts
3	Grievous wound, you are in Distress: lose 1 Spirit when your turn starts
4	Luck is on your side, no effect

Trauma.

When Stress reaches the limit a knight can sustain – it resets and leaves a Trauma behind. Trauma counts as a Serious Injury and can potentially cause a heart attack and kill a knight if they are out of Injury slots.

Stress. Each time, half.

Long Rest

Healing an Injury. Yap yap, doctor, guard, quirks

Coping with Trauma. Referee decides how long it would persist and how it should be treated. By default, on the first morning after having a Trauma it heals itself, but leaves a permanent mark. Acquire a Quirk as if a knight healed from an Injury.

Virture restoration . Sustenance, Remedy, Stimulants.

I Spellcasting

Spellcasting resources is represented by a set of d6 dice equal to the value of Clarity. Each time you restore Spirit via indulging a Passion, you can regain up to two missing dice from this set.

To cast a spell, a caster rolls any number of dice as an Action from that set and then decides what to cast. Only one spell can be cast per roll. If the spell does not state otherwise, Smite feat is not applicable for attacks performed within them.

Here are spells that a knight can learn during mage training:

Quick summary of several spell with reference to a list of spells in the end.

Detect Magic

Pick any number of dice, for each one which rolled for a maximum value you can ask a question about surrounding magic and receive truthful answer, but the amount of words in that answer can't exceed the value rolled on the die. For each other die, the answer is either yes, no or silence if the question is not applicable. Information for the answer is provided by spells around you and yourself. For example, spells usually are not directly marked by their caster and are not aware of it's surroundings beyond the spells design.

Recuperation of Magic

When caster rolls dice to cast a spell, additionally to casting they can choose half, rounded down, of remaining dice and discard the rest. These chosen dice can be stored to cast spells later as if you rolled them. They persist until spent, but the total amount of dice(stored and unrolled) can't exceed the value of Clarity.

2 Witchcraft

Witches cast spell as a manifestation of favors granted them by their patrons. So, logically, there should be different patrons with different sets of spells and different ways to please them.
